

Tania Eulalia Martinez Cruz is an Èyuujk indigenous interdisciplinary researcher from Oaxaca, Mexico. She is an associate researcher at the Free University of Brussels working on Indigenous Peoples' water, food and knowledge systems. She uses her research to advocate for the respect of Indigenous Peoples' knowledge systems and their meaningful participation in food and water-related policy processes using a rights-based approach. She is also an independent consultant on Indigenous Peoples' issues, the food-water-energy nexus and social inclusion. Currently, she is a focal point for Latin America for the Coalition on Indigenous Peoples' food systems. She believes in the role of education to change lives positively and does advocacy work on the right and access to education for Indigenous girls and women in STEM.
